Did you know?

- CAHS is the only agency appointed under state law to investigate cases of animal cruelty, neglect and abandonment in Franklin County.
- CAHS investigates more than 4,000 cases of heinous animal crimes each year and provides a caring harbor for nearly 15,000 animals annually.
- CAHS is a private, non-profit 501(c)3 organization formed in 1883.
- Research has shown that animal cruelty is a precursor to human violence. Intervention at the point of animal cruelty can prevent future family and societal violence.

Corporate Membership Makes a Difference

Your support as a Corporate Member of the Capital Area Humane Society helps to make a difference in the lives of animals and people in our community.

At the Humane Society we know that lives are changed when people and animals come together. We experience this impact every day... in the smile of a child who has just adopted her first kitten, in the laughter of a senior citizen participating in our pet-assisted therapy program at an area nursing home, or in the eyes of a dog rescued by one of our humane officers and has been adopted into a new loving family.

"Hi!
I'm Aspen
and I got another chance."

I am a happy guy these days. I adopted this new family, and they are so good to me. I needed a special home that would give me loads of attention and long walks. I like to climb and no fence is too tall for me. When I came to CAHS, I got a lot of extra attention because of my climbing abilities. Since it was so hard for me to stay in my cage, I got to participate in the PAWS Program at a local women's prison. PAWS stands for "Pets and Women for Success."

My new Mom and Dad are taking me to doggie training class. I want to get high marks so that I can be trained to be a therapy dog. My trainer said that I would make a great therapy dog because I am so loving and a good listener.

I am now living the good life because my friends at CAHS gave me another chance. With all of their love and support, I was able to find a loving home of my own.
